News of the Churches

Low Hotel at 9 o'clock Friday by Mrs. B. E. McMahon, Mrs. Foy Hammons, Sr., Mrs. Finley Ward, Misses Mary Louise and Zilpha Keith.

The bridal motif was carried out in the table decorations. A garden scene with small containers of daisies, feverfew and poppies were used with the miniature bride and bridesmaid placed on reflectors.

Miss Bruner was presented a lovely corsage and a gift of her chosen pattern of crystal.

Out of town guests included: Mrs. Gordon Kling of Sandstone, Minn., Mrs. James Watson of Cinn., Tex., Miss Zilpha Keith of Dallas, and Miss Elizabeth Ann Holmes of Sheridan.

Talbot Field, Jr., and Miss Bruner, as bride and groom, were entertained at their home Thursday evening with a beautifully appointed dinner honoring Talbot Field, Jr., and his bride-elect, Miss Carlene Bruner.

The Gillespie home was decorated throughout with arrangements of shasta daisies and other summer flowers.

The dinner table, covered with a white damask cloth, was centered with shasta daisies in a white antique bowl. White tapers in white antique holders lighted the table.

The buffet held the lovely birthday cake, a surprise to Miss Bruner.

Covers were laid for Miss Bruner, Mr. Field, Mrs. Clyde Hill, Miss Hattie Ann Field and the hosts.

ISLAND OF ESCAPE

By Hugh Lawrence Nelson

The second night out, Bea Cosgrove and Henry Gough Harding sat together on the afterdeck.

From amidships the occasional opening and closing of the galley door let light out into the dark night and brought the sounds of Nona McGuire, Agnes Pirth and George Bascombe wrangling amiably about a three-hand bridge.

From far forward, Mollie's laughter told of her amusement with a member of the crew.

The sea had subsided into long black swells which the Simpatico alternately climbed and slid down.

Henry Harding broke a long silence. "You know, he said, you know the sort of woman Miss Stark is. Why didn't you tell me?"

"There are some things it is better for a man to find out for himself," Bea said.

Harding thought that over, then nodded. "You're right. And it's a strange thing, but Mother used to say the identical thing to me. Of course, I knew Mother well enough to get the idea as to whether she really approved or not. You know, Miss Cosgrove—Bea if I may—you are like Mother in so many ways."

She shivered.

"He took me—notice, went on—'You're trustworthy. So trustworthy. That's a major thing. And you're understanding. You can look ahead and realize the light part of a man must follow to be true to himself. To his past and his future. I can understand what you mean back there on the island now. I couldn't then. I can understand my Island Memorial to Mother could not become a fact as long as it was based on a partial wrong. It must be entirely above reproach.'"

Bea Cosgrove reached out touchingly to make him stop talking. He seized her hand and went on eagerly.

"I've been thinking, trying to figure out what I did that was wrong. There could only be one thing. Of course, even then it was a clean-cut business deal. But it did have an unfortunate aftermath. It was perfectly legal. A man killed himself when he found out his worthless property he thought he was losing on me was rich in oil. A wedding of course. He could not abide by the rules, or play the game. But I do remember he had a wife. That's it. That's the way I can make it right so the new Speare Island will be a success."

"Bea Cosgrove said hoarsely, "Make it right? How could you ever make it right?"

Harding said impatiently, "Why, I'll give her a part of the money. I have left, of course. There's no legal claim, but some might think there's a moral one. So that's what I'll do. And afterward I, that is, we, can start again."

"Mrs. Martin won't be hard to find."

"You don't think so?" He got it suddenly. "The name! How did you know that?"

"You know my name, she said clearly. 'Bea Cosgrove Martin. Mrs. Jim Martin, if you want it that way. One time wife of—the weakling. The man you meant.'"

Henry Harding released her hand and jumped to his feet. He flung an arm in front of his eyes as if to shield them from the gleam of light from the wheelhouse.

"No! Not you! Not you too!" He whistled then on his heel, took the few steps to the splintered rail. His white-clad body caught light as it hurtled far out into the darkness.

Bea screamed. She heard shouts, orders.

The screams of the Simpatico slowed, the heeled over as the wheel went down hard. A searchlight snapped on.

Bea made her way to the wheelhouse, went in and stood beside Captain Oak.

His eyes were glued on the compass. "So you told him."

"I told him."

"I was watching. He ran away again. Oak reached out, pulled the indicator to dead slow."

"Can you find him?" Bea asked. Oak spun the wheel. "I can put the Simpatico on about the spot where he went over. He can see the lights, if that is what he wishes. He can come to us."

The man at the searchlight swiveled it across the prow. The dark surface of the water was streaked with white foam in the circle of the spotlight.

The first light was faint, barely distinguishable above the lonely sound of water.

Miguel Oak rang again. The engines stopped their lowest throb. The Simpatico lay dead and silent.

The cry was repeated. Lower. Henry Gough Harding moved in to the circle of light. He was swimming strongly.

In a few moments he was helped over the rail. The time in the sea had heaved the breach in his shell. He pushed away helping hands. "Captain Oak! Ah, Captain Oak, I must compliment you on your seamanship and fast thinking. But this does not excuse you for the negligence in not repairing that broken rail. Someone not as strong a swimmer as myself might have fallen overboard."

Miguel Oak gave the signal and the Simpatico came to life. "I'll have the rail repaired," he said.

"See that you do! I may not feel it necessary to report your negligence," he appeared to notice Bea for the first time. "And as for you, Mrs. Martin, if you will they will pay you for your troubles. He strode away, slammed the galley door behind him.

Captain Oak put the Simpatico back on her course toward the mainland, turned the wheel over to the man who had worked the searchlight. He took Bea Cosgrove by the arm.

"Come," he said.

The End

Parachutes Come in Handy for Women Prisoners

McAlester, Okla., June 17.—(AP)—One hundred and fifty women in distress have hit the silk at the Oklahoma state penitentiary.

The lady prisoners are wearing parachute pants—but nobody's bailed out yet.

Warden Clarence Burford nearly went into a spin himself when the prison matrons reported a grave pantie shortage in the women's ward. The state hadn't provided enough to go round.

So when Burford heard of an airforce surplus sale he jumped at the chance.

A prison agent bought 300 'chutes—two for each pantie wearer. Matrons held sewing classes and businesswomen made the result: Happy landings—on nylon.

Hoffman Wins Fight Against ERP Slash

Washington June 17.—(AP)—Senators said today that Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul Hoffman had won his fight against a heavy cut in European recovery spending.

"The push for a big reduction is all washed up," Senator Robertson (D-Va.) told a reporter.

Other members of the senate appropriations committee agreed.

Hoffman has battled with the committee in four long and rough sessions in defense of ECA's multi-billion dollar program. He was down for a return bout this afternoon.

The ECA chief pulled out his ace in the hole yesterday. This was a report that a $1,000,000,000 cut in recovery spending actually will mean less purchases of American cotton, tobacco, wheat, butter, lumber, and other commodities. The feeling was that with some American business declining farmers and businessmen will want foreign markets especially.

Senator Young (R-ND) said any cut Hoffman's report would have a tendency to slow down the demands for a large reduction.

"We do have surplus food running out of our ears," Young said. "And the recovery program is one way to get rid of it."

The recovery sentiment appeared to be that ECA will have to take another cut in the second year's program but it will not be anywhere near the $1,000,000,000 some senators suggest.

The house voted ECA $3,568,470,000 to be spent in the first 10 and one-half months of the fiscal year beginning July 1 if necessary. Hoffman said he would be satisfied with this and would try to spread the money over 12 months.

Robertson said committee members realized that any large cut would be "impractical."

"I'm satisfied the committee won't go beyond my suggestion," he said. This is to give ECA $168,000,000 more than the house gave it—but require the program to be spread over 12 months.

There was no insurance on the new laundry, new warehouse and storage plants, recreation, female occupational therapy, sewing and mending unit, male occupational therapy, mattress factory and morgue buildings.

Tornado insurance carried would cover only about one-third of a loss. $20,000 of supplies in new buildings were not insured while insurance is still carried on supplies in an empty warehouse.

A factory which has been razed, and its contents are still insured, fidelity and automobile insurance on a former employee is still carried.

It believes premiums on bonds of employees are about "50 per cent too high."

The committee, composed of the Senator and Frank Newell, Little Rock, and Forrest J. Annen, Hot Springs, was appointed by Governor McMath several months ago. It reported to the board that:

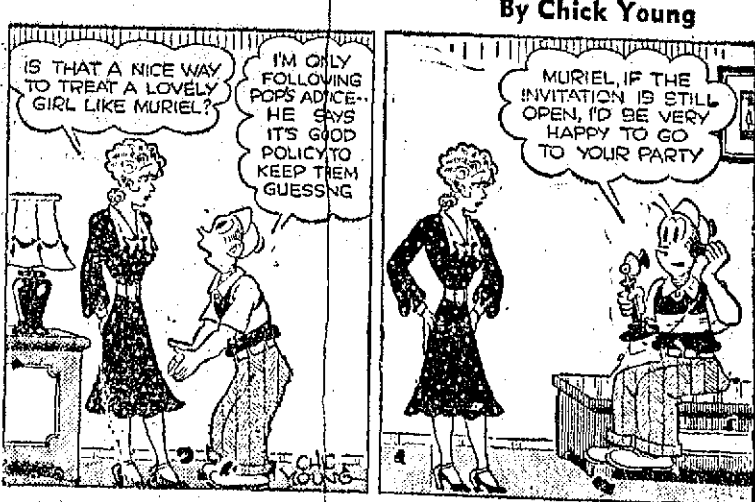

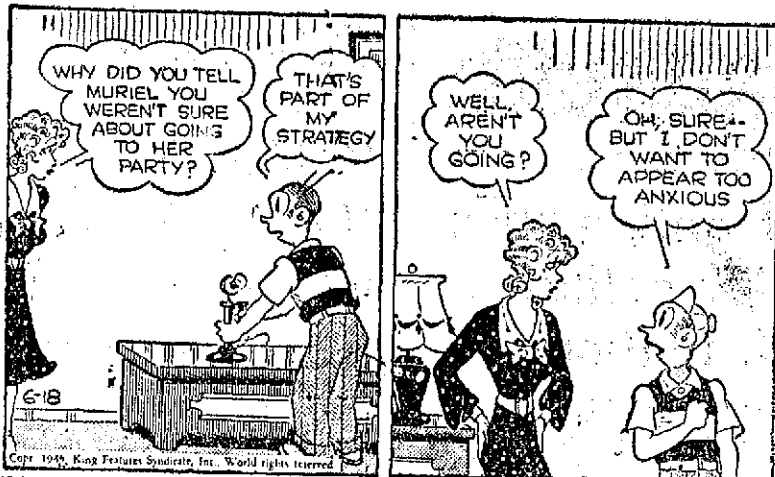

There was no insurance on the new laundry, new warehouse and storage plants, recreation, female occupational therapy, sewing and mending unit, male occupational therapy, mattress factory and morgue buildings.
